A Horse at a Canter.

CANTER is said to be an abbreviation of Canterbury gallop, and derived from the pilgrims riding to Canterbury on easy ambling horses. A canter is a well-known pace of the horse, but it is not generally a natural pace. When the horse is excited to move his station from one place to another, he performs it with a velocity proportionate to the exciting cause. Thus, he changes from the walk to the trot, and from the trot to the gallop, according to his inclination. In each of these changes he acquires an addition of speed; but, as the trot is equal in speed to the canter, he seldom adopts the canter, but changes to the gallop when he wishes to accelerate his motion.

The horse is taught to perform the canter by shortening the gallop. The canter is to the gallop very much what the walk is to the trot, though probably a more artificial pace. The exertion is much less, the spring less distant, and the feet come to the ground in more regular succession.

STRAY NOTES.

Every day and hour we are sowing the seeds of character, which one day will astonish even ourselves by blossoming forth in actions of which we had not supposed ourselves capable.

20. — Garrick's genius threw every other performer into the shade. Even Mrs. Clive, with all her original merit, found the impression she made on her audiences rapidly diminish. She vented her spleen without restraint upon Garrick, and sometimes endeavoured to undervalue his talents.

One night she witnessed from the wings his performance of Lear, and became absorbed in the masterly delineation in spite of herself, and at last, after repeated alternations of tears and abuse, wholly overcome, she rushed to the green-room, and broke into the following uncouth but expressive tribute to the universality of Garrick's genius :—

"Confound him! I believe he could act on a gridiron!"

24.—Frederick the Great was in the habit of spending his afternoons drinking beer and smoking a pipe in a little island on the Spree. A few of his ministers were generally invited to meet him at the tavern, and there they used to discuss various political topics.

In one of these meetings a minister of the Emperor Charles VI. sat between his Majesty and his Prime Minister. The king's wrath had been excited by an answer made by the Austrian, and as his fist was more ready for a reply than his tongue, he gave him a box on the ear.

M. de Siekendorf without hesitation gave a sounder one still to the Prussian minister, and said :—

"Pass it on."

25.—This festival — the conversion of St. Paul—has always been reckoned particularly ominous with respect to the future weather of the year; and, what is very curious, this notion prevails in many countries distant from each other. The rhymes here given seem to have been familiar to everybody in the early ages :—

If St. Paul's day be fair and cleare,
It doth betide a happy yeare;

But if by chance it then should raine,
It will make dear all kinds of graine;
And if the clouds make dark the skie,
Then neate and fowles this year shall die;
If blustering winds do blow aloft,
Then wars shall trouble the realm full oft.

27.—Mozart's early career is full of romantic interest. We have been often told how the little boy of three years stood by the piano while his sister took her lesson, and astonished his father at its close by searching among the keys for a few moments with his baby fingers, then playing the exercise neatly and correctly; how a year later he amused himself with writing minuets, and attempted a concerto which was free from errors, but so difficult that no one could play it; how he always insisted on carrying about his toys to the sound of music; how he covered the floor, the chairs, and the walls with figures in a fit of absorbing passion for mathematics—a talent which showed itself later in the remarkable precision with which musical ideas arranged themselves in his head, to be written down at a moment's notice.

The exquisite delicacy of organisation that made him shudder and turn pale at the sound of a trumpet, the fine ear that could detect the variation of an eighth of a tone in a violin from one day to another, the extreme susceptibility that could not bear a cold word from those he loved without tears—these were more or less essential parts of the outfit which nature bestows upon a musical artist.

30.—Quin sometimes said things at once witty and wise. Disputing concerning the execution of Charles I., "But by what laws," said his opponent, "was he put to death?"

Quin replied, "By all the laws he had left them."

If January calends be summerly gay,
'Twill be wintry weather till the calends of May.

The Garden.

BEFORE the close of January a few flowers will be in bloom. Train weakly roses, clematis, honeysuckle, and other creeping plants. Any still unplanted bulbs, such as the tulip and narcissus, should be put into the ground during the first open weather. Any bulbs planted in the close of last year and now appearing above ground should be looked to; it is well to shelter the more valuable sorts, by layers of fern leaves, from frost and snow. Delicate plants must be taken particular care of at this time. In houses, cinerarias, primulas, etc., will now be in flower.

If the weather permits, sow early peas and beans in sheltered borders. Should bees be kept, feed them if the weight of the hive shows they require feeding. After each fall, shake the snow off evergreens, which are much harmed by alternate freezing and thawing of snow-water.

The Lettuce.

LETTUCE is the most popular of all salads.

It was eaten by the Hebrews at the Feast of the Passover, and has been eaten ever since, as it probably was before, with the spring lamb.

In days of old it was served as a first course, as it was supposed to excite the appetite, but now custom has it to follow the roast.

If the hostess is not keen about having many courses, and if the palate is consulted, it is really nicest eaten with the roast. The good juice of the meat accords with the sauces and improves the lettuce, which is, although healthful, rather tasteless.

If served alone, it should come between the dinner proper and the sweetmeats and puddings, as with its acid sauce the richness of the preceding dishes disappears, and the palate is prepared for the desserts.

Until ready for serving, lettuce should be kept fresh by sprinkling the heads and standing the stems in water. Care should be taken not to crush or bruise the leaves, and any that are so injured should be rejected from the dish. On the crispness of the leaves depend the beauty and taste of the vegetable. Lettuce has no odour, and, when young, little taste, but as it grows older it acquires an acrid and rather bitter one. The leaves must be carefully separated—broken apart, not cut—then washed carefully in cold water, to remove any dirt and insects, and shaken lightly to free from water.

STRAY NOTES.

A kind heart is a fountain of gladness, making everything in its vicinity to freshen into smiles.

12.—Immanuel Kant, the great German philosopher, was never farther distant than twenty miles from his native town, during the whole course of a lifetime which lasted eighty years.

14.—Here is a song for St. Valentine's Day:—

It is the hour of morning's prime,
The young day of the year,
The day of days before the time,
When brighter hopes appear.
It is the time of early love.
When suns but faintly shine:
It is the day, all days above,
The sweet St. Valentine.

The cold snows on the meadow lie,
And not a leaf is green,
Yet here and there in yonder sky
A gleam of light is seen.
So love, young love, 'mid storms and snow,
Darts forth a light divine;
So darker days the brightness show,
Of thine, St. Valentine.

20.—An Englishman once came to Frederick the Great of Prussia for the express purpose of giving him an exhibition of his power of recollection. Frederick went to Voltaire, who read to the king a pretty long poem which he had just finished. The Englishman was present, and was in such a position that he could hear every word of the poem, but was concealed from Voltaire's notice.

After the reading of the poem was finished, Frederick observed to the author that the production could not be an original one, as there was a foreign gentleman present who could recite every word of it. Voltaire listened with amazement to the stranger as he repeated word for word the poem which he had been at so much pains in composing, and giving way to a momentary freak of passion, he tore the manuscript in pieces.

A statement was then made to him of the circumstances under which the Englishman became acquainted with his poem, which had the effect to mitigate his anger, and he was very willing to do penance for the suddenness of his passion by copying down the work from a second repetition of it by the stranger, who was able to go through with it as before.

22.—Sydney Smith died on the 22nd of February, 1845, and the kindly character which made him a general favourite may be seen from a pleasing incident of his last days told by his daughter, Lady Holland. He died at peace with himself and all the world, anxious to the last to promote the comfort and happiness of others. He sent messages of kindness and forgiveness to the few he thought had injured him. Almost his last act was bestowing a small living of £120 per annum on a poor worthy and friendless clergyman, who had lived a long life of struggle with poverty on £40 a year.

"Full of happiness and gratitude," says Lady Holland, "the clergyman entreated he might be allowed to see my father; but the latter so dreaded any agitation that he most unwillingly consented, saying, 'Then he must not thank me, I am too weak to bear it.' He entered—my father gave him a few words of advice—the clergyman silently pressed his hand and blessed his death-bed.

"Surely such blessings are not given in vain."

28.—By an Act passed in 1892 it is not lawful during the months of March, April, May, June, and July, to sell or expose for sale in any part of Great Britain, any hare or leveret under a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings. The Act does not apply to foreign hares imported into Great Britain.

THE WISE MAN.

The character of a wise man consists in three things. To do himself what he tells others to do; to act on no occasion contrary to justice; and to bear the weaknesses of those about him.

The Garden.

WHENEVER the weather is favourable set about any work that was hindered in January by frost or snow. Pinks, polyanthuses, thrift, box, and all plants employed for edging borders may be moved in suitable weather. On mild days admit air freely to auriculas, pelargoniums, and other hardy pot plants. In the last week of the month sow mignonette and hardy annuals in a warm border for subsequent transplanting.

Sow radishes in a sheltered border, but protect them with green leaves or light litter, and uncover at every favourable interval. Peas sown now will be ready for the table about as soon as those planted in November, and will yield a more abundant crop. Plant them in drills wide at the bottom and spread the seed regularly. Sow Bath or green Egyptian cos-lettuce.

Currant and raspberry bushes unfold their leaves at the end of this month. Prepare netting and other protection for wall-trees, and use it when the buds begin to swell, during the prevalence of north-easterly winds.

Different Kinds of Violets.

ALL the species of violet deserve to be cultivated, either for the beauty or the scent of their flowers. The hardy perennial kinds are well fitted for ornamenting the front of flower borders or rockwork, but the smaller species succeed best when grown in pots in a mixture of loam, peat, and sand. The dog's violet (V. canina) is said, but without truth, to be a famous agent for removing cutaneous diseases.

There are eight native species of violet—the hairy violet (V. hirta), the sweet violet (V. odorata), the marsh violet (V. palustris), the dog's violet (V. canina), the cream-coloured violet (V. lactea), the dwarf yellow-spurred violet (V. flavicornis, the fancy violet, or heart's ease (V. tricolor), and the yellow mountain violet, or pansy (V. lutea).

The common sweet violet is highly fragrant, and gives its name to a peculiar deep purplish-blue colour, as well as to a delicious scent, resembling its own.

STRAY NOTES.

What is the secret of life, of enjoyment, of happiness, ay, and of success in life?—Good nature.

1.—There is no doubt that the valuable services of St. David, the patron saint of Wales, to the British Church, entitle him to lasting remembrance. Giraldus writes of him that he was "a mirror and pattern to all, instructing both by word and example, excellent in his preaching, but still more so in his works. He was a doctrine to all, a guide to the religious, a life to the poor, a support to orphans, a protection to widows, a father to the fatherless, a rule to monks, and a model to teachers; becoming all to all, that so he might gain all to God."

St. David, who died about the year 544, was buried in the cathedral church of the present St. David's, and a monument was raised to his memory.

3.—King Charles II., after the Restoration, told Waller, the poet, that he had made better verses and said finer things of Cromwell than of him.

"That may very well be," replied Waller, "for poets generally succeed better in imaginary things than in real ones."

6.—Michael Angelo was of the middle stature, bony in make, rather spare, and broad-shouldered, his complexion good, his forehead square and somewhat projecting, his eyes hazel and rather small, his brows with little hair, his nose flat from a blow given him in his youth by Torrigiano, his lips thin, his cranium large in proportion to his face.

20.—It was his power of mind which could contemplate the greatest number of facts or propositions with accuracy that so eminently distinguished Newton from other men. It was this power that enabled him to arrange the whole of a treatise in his thoughts before he committed a single idea to paper. In the exercise of this power he was known occasionally to have passed a whole night or day, entirely inattentive to surrounding objects.

21.—Queen Elizabeth was taught to write by the celebrated Roger Ascham. Her writing is extremely beautiful and correct, as may be seen by examining a little manuscript book of prayers, preserved in the British Museum. Her first writing book is preserved at Oxford, in the Bodleian Library. The gradual improvement of her Majesty's handwriting is very honourable to her diligence; but the most curious thing is the paper on which she tried her pens; this she usually did by writing the name of her beloved brother Edward; a proof of the early and ardent attachment she formed to that amiable prince.

25.—The Annunciation of our Lady is commonly called in England Lady Day, as an abridgment of the Day of our Blessed Lady. This festival is in celebration of the announcement by the Holy Ghost to Mary of the incarnation of Christ. In Catholic countries the service of this day resounds with "Hail, Mary!" uttered in a strain of the highest enthusiasm.

29.—In the early forties, a frenzied notoriety was suddenly attached by society to Hudson, the so-called "Railway King," and his wife. Countless, as may be supposed, and totally unleavened by good nature, were the anecdotes circulated in ridicule behind their backs, while from interested motives all honour was shown to the faces of this unsuspecting pair. One story told of poor Mrs. Hudson was that, being honised over the abode of a peer of high rank, and shown the bust of Marcus Aurelius, she gazed at it for some time with reverence, and then inquired, with bated breath, "if that was the late Markiss?"

PRUDENT CONDUCT.

It is better to yield a little than quarrel a great deal. The habit of "standing up," as people call it, for their little rights is one of the most disagreeable and undignified in the world.

The Garden.

Any anemone roots left over from the autumn should now be planted. In this way a succession of flowers is secured late in the season. Divide Chinese chrysanthemums, and place them in small pots, or in a border of rich soil, to pot later in the season. Pot scarlet lobelias, and place them in a sunny window or a moderate hot-bed. At the end of the month the seeds of hardy annuals may be put in the ground in light soils. They should be sown in small patches, and covered with a little dry earth. Transplant last year's layers of carnations into beds or large pots at the end of the month. Sow borage and Canada cloves for bees.

In the kitchen garden there is much to do this month. Sow lettuce and carrot seeds, and radishes later in the month. Plant potatoes in rows two feet apart, and ten inches between the sets. Graft apples, pears, cherries, and plums; for this the middle of the month is said to be the best time.

War against Rats.

A GENTLEMAN in the country was much annoyed by rats, which constantly visited his cellar. He caught some of them in traps, but the nuisance was little abated. Knowing something of their habits, he resolved on a plan by which he hoped to rid himself of them.

He provided himself with a large oak box, half filled with meal, which was placed in the cellar, while he sat, concealed with sacks, to watch, just having a spy-hole. The rats soon made their appearance, first reconnoitring, then timidly approaching the box, and after a time attacking the meal, keeping a look-out all the time. The next night the same plan was repeated, and the rats were emboldened to enter the box. The third night saw them in yet greater numbers, and as the gentleman had placed little ladders beside the box for their convenience they were soon gorging away at the meal. The fourth night was to be the crisis. The rats had lost all fear, and while they were devouring the remains of the meal, down came the strong lid, and they were all safe. The next morning the box and its contents were removed from the cellar and launched into a pond.

STRAY NOTES.

Those that fly may fight again,
Which he can never do that's slain.—BUTLER.

4.—A voluminous author was one day expatiating on the advantages of employing an amanuensis, and thus saving time and the trouble of writing.

"How do you manage it?" said Goldsmith.

"Why, I walk about the room, and dictate to a clever man, who puts down very correctly all that I tell him, so that I have nothing to do more than just to look over the manuscript, and then send it to the press."

Goldsmith was delighted with the information, and desired his friend to send the amanuensis the next morning. The scribe accordingly waited upon the doctor, with the implements of pens, ink, and paper placed in order before him, ready to catch the oracle.

Goldsmith paced the room with great solemnity several times for some time, but, after racking his brains to no purpose, he put his hand into his pocket, and, presenting the amanuensis with a guinea, said:—

"It won't do, my friend. I find that my head and hand must go together."

13.—Lord North's habits of somnolency led to many a contretemps. It was constitutional somnolency, which attacked him alike on the treasury bench and in private society.

One evening he called on a lady of condition, and charming mind and person, whom he found in a violent altercation with her sister-in-law. Lord North attempted to interpose as a mediator, but they were not to be pacified without legal assistance. He consented, therefore, to wait until the lady of the house should return from her solicitor's chambers in Lincoln's Inn.

Seating himself in an arm-chair before the fire, he soon fell into a profound sleep, from which he was not awakened by the entrance of one of the maid-servants, who seeing a corpulent man, with a blue ribband across his breast, asleep in her mistress's drawing-room, and being unacquainted with the First Minister's person, ran down into the kitchen to give the alarm.

19.—Of all word-portraits of Lord Byron, the most interesting and complete is perhaps that sketched by Lady Blessington, who saw the poet a few months before his departure for Greece.

"I had fancied him taller," says her ladyship, "with a more dignified and commanding air, and I looked in vain for the hero-looking sort of person with whom I had so long identified him in imagination. His appearance is, however, highly prepossessing; his head is finely-shaped, and the forehead open, high, and noble; his eyes are grey and full of expression, but one is visibly larger than the other; his mouth is the most remarkable feature in his face, the upper lip of Grecian shortness, and the corners descending, the lips full and finely-cut. In speaking he shows his teeth very much, and they are white and even; but I observed that even in his smile—and he smiles frequently—there is something of a scornful expression in his mouth that is evidently natural, and not, as many suppose, affected. His countenance is full of expression, and changes with the subject of conversation. He is very slightly lame, and the deformity of his foot is so little remarkable that I am not now aware which foot it is."

23.—The following lines, said to have been written by Shakespeare, are inscribed on a flat stone which marks the spot where he is buried in the churchyard of Stratford-on-Avon:—

Good friend, for Jesu's sake forbeare
To dig the dust enclosed here;
Blessed be he that spares these stones,
And curst be he that moves my bones.

WORKERS AND IDLERS.

It is a well-known though unacknowledged fact that diligent and hard-working persons can always find time for special purposes, while those who have nothing to do have rarely a moment to spare from their absorbing occupations.

The Garden.

THE principal sowing of all the hardy annuals should now be finished; the sowing of the half-hardy should be completed by the end of the month. Transplant hardy biennials, such as wallflowers, Brompton stocks, hollyhocks, etc., if this was not done in autumn. Auriculas in bloom should be protected against sun and rain, but should be allowed as much air as possible. They should be watered regularly, and the use of manure water on alternate days will improve the bloom. The water should never go on the leaves. One may now make to advantage cuttings of verbenas, heliotropes, etc. Watch rose-trees, and free them from grubs. Garden pests—caterpillars, beetles, red spiders, ants, etc., are very active. Re-pot window plants, and thin them out if necessary. Rake beds smooth, turn up gravel walks, and clip box edgings. Proceed actively with all the operations of the kitchen garden.

How to Grow Thyme.

GARDEN THYME, or Thymus vulgaris, gets its name from θυμός, "courage," being considered a reviver of the spirits; or from θύω, "to sacrifice," being employed as incense. The varieties are the broad-leaved green, narrow-leaved green, variegated, and lemon-scented. The variegated is grown almost solely on account of its ornamental foliage.

A poor, light, and dry soil is best suited to it. In moist or rich ones, it becomes luxuriant, but deficient in its aromatic qualities, and generally perishes during the winter. The situation cannot be too open.

Thyme is propagated both by seed and rooted slips. Sowing may be performed from the middle of March until about the beginning of May. Slips may be planted from the beginning of February until the beginning of May.

The seed must be sown neither thin nor raked in more than half-an-inch below the surface. It is sometimes sown in drills of a similar depth, six inches apart, or as an edging to a bed or border.

STRAY NOTES.

Some people sink all enjoyment of present comfort in the foreboding apprehension of future evils, which may never happen.

1.—There is a natural eagerness to welcome May as a summer month, but it belongs, as a rule, very much to spring. Proverbial wisdom warns us against being too ready to regard it as a time for light clothing:—

"Change not a clout
Till May be out."

3.—Killing blackbeetles is the orthodox Ascension Day custom with Roman children. On the eve they go out gathering beetles, and next day make miniature bonfires, and either cremate the insects in a mass, or set fire to their tails, and make them run up a long plank, the lads and lasses meanwhile dancing round and singing. This practice is very ancient and has survived all efforts to put it down.

5.—"Amongst the private instructions to me by Bonaparte," says M. de Bourrienne, "was the following rather singular order: 'At night,' said he, 'you will enter my bedchamber as seldom as possible. Never awaken me when you have good news to announce; with good news there is no necessity to hurry. When, on the contrary, you are the depositary of evil tidings, rouse me instantly; for on such occasions there is not a moment to be lost.'"

8.—Le Sage resided in a little cottage while he supplied the world with their most agreeable novels, and appears to have derived the sources of his existence in his old age from the filial exertions of an excellent son, who was an actor of some genius.

17. — Talleyrand, only three months before his own death, said: "A Minister for Foreign Affairs must possess the faculty of appearing open at the same time that he remains impenetrable; of being in reality reserved, although perfectly frank in his manner." The precept was his own portrait.

19.—St. Dunstan was born at Glastonbury, of which monastery he became Abbot, and died Archbishop of Canterbury in 968.

The legend of St. Dunstan relates many miracles of him, the most popular of which is to this effect: that St. Dunstan, as the fact really was, became expert in goldsmith's work; it then gives as a story that, while he was busied in making a chalice, the devil annoyed him by his personal appearance, and tempted him; whereupon St. Dunstan suddenly seized the fiend by the nose with a pair of iron tongs, burning hot, and so held him while he roared and cried till the night was far spent.

27.—The life of "Venerable Bede," in Butler, is one of the best memoirs in his biography of the saints. He was an Englishman, in priest's orders. It is said of him that he was a prodigy of learning in an unlearned age; that he surpassed Gregory the Great in eloquence and copiousness of style, and that Europe scarcely produced a greater scholar. He was a teacher of youth, and at one time had six hundred pupils, yet he exercised his clerical functions with punctuality, and wrote an incredible number of works in theology, science, and the polite arts. It is true he fell into the prevailing credulity of the early age wherein he flourished, but he enlightened it by his erudition, and improved it by his unfeigned piety and unwearied zeal.

Not to ridicule so great a man, but as an instance of the desire to attribute wonderful miracles to distinguished characters, the following anecdote concerning Bede is extracted from the "Golden Legend." "He was blind, and desiring to be led forth to preach, his servant carried him to a heap of stones, to which the good father, believing himself preaching to a sensible congregation, delivered a noble discourse, whereunto, when he had finished his sermon, the stones answered, and said 'Amen!'"

HINTS.

Nothing is more expensive than penuriousness; nothing more anxious than carelessness; and every duty which is bidden to wait returns with seven fresh duties at its back.

The Garden.

HALF-HARDY plants that have been sheltered during the winter may be uncovered about the middle of the month; such as have been housed may be brought out and planted in beds, or allowed to stand in pots as required. This is a favourable time for putting in cuttings of double wallflowers, rockets, and other hardy perennials. If heartsease be now propagated in cuttings and placed in a shady border, it will flower in the autumn, and the largest flowers will be produced by these young plants. Continue the sowing of peas; those already up will require sticking. Plant potatoes, and sow radishes. Sow mustard and cress. To procure a succession sow cress once a month, and mustard once a fortnight. Keep a sharp look out for weeds. May is full of danger for the garden, in consequence of the hot sun by day being often followed by cold frosts at night.

What to do with Garden Rubbish.

IN many gardens, and especially small enclosures in and near towns, difficulty is often experienced in disposing of vegetable refuse that always accumulates in the autumn. A great deal of it, however, may easily be disposed of by chopping up and burying a foot deep, where it will gradually decay and increase the fertility of the soil. Another plan is to make an excavation in any convenient place, lay in the vegetable matter, treading it firmly, and also build it above the surface, then cover it with the soil removed, forming a mound, and if this is made smooth it will not be unsightly. Such vegetable refuse stores can be utilised in summer by growing vegetable marrows on them, and in the autumn, after the marrows are over, the station on which they have grown can be removed, spread on the ground for digging in as manure, and another heap of fresh matter formed in its stead as the base for a future crop of marrows; or, if these are not wanted, the mounds can be covered with trailing flowers in summer, such as nasturtiums or other annuals of procumbent growth.

STRAY NOTES.

When the morn breaketh forth, I know the day which followeth: a good man discovereth himself by his looks.

3.—King George III., one day walking up the streets of Cheltenham, the common crier, who happened to be then a woman, concluded a public notice by exclaiming:—"God save the King!"

The good and venerable monarch turned round and emphatically replied—"God save the crier and the people!"

4.—Lord Eldon's wife was somewhat "near." His lordship was very fond of shooting, and usually retired into the country for a few weeks towards the end of the season, where he was in the habit of riding a Welsh pony for which he had given fifty shillings. One morning his lordship, intending to enjoy a few hours' sport, ordered Bob, the pony, to be saddled. Lady Eldon told him he could not have it, but, company being in the room, gave no reason. In a few minutes, however, the servant opened the door, and announced that Bob was ready.

"Why, bless me," exclaimed her ladyship, "you can't ride him, John; he has got no shoes on!"

"Oh, yes, my lady," said the servant, "he was shod last week!"

"Shameful!" exclaimed her ladyship. "How dare you, or anybody, have that pony shod without orders? John," continued she, addressing her husband, "you know you rode him out shooting only four times last year, so I had his shoes taken off and have kept them ever since in my bureau. They are as good as new, and these people have had him shod again. We shall be ruined at this rate!"

12.—In the south aisle of Westminster Abbey is the bust of Charles Kingsley, Canon of Westminster, accompanied by the inscription:—

CHARLES KINGSLEY,
Canon of Westminster.
"God is Love."
"Quit you like men."
"Be strong."
Born, June 12, 1829.
Died, Jan. 23, 1875.
Buried at Eversley,
Jan. 28, 1875.

14.—The battle of Naseby, between the Royalists under Charles I., and the Parliament troops under Fairfax, was decided by the entire rout of the king's army, and the seizure of all his artillery and ammunition. Among the spoil was the king's cabinet with his letters, which the Parliament afterwards published.

Hume says, "they give an advantageous idea both of the king's genius and morals." Yet it is a fact, which every person who reads the correspondence must inevitably arrive at, that the king purposed deception when he professed good faith, and that as true genius never exists with fraud, these letters do not entitle him to reputation for common honesty or real ability.

19.—The fears of James I. for his personal safety were often excited without serious grounds. On one occasion, having been induced to visit a coal-pit on the coast of Fife, he was conducted a little way under the sea, and brought to daylight again on a small island, or what was such at full tide, down which a shaft had been sunk. James, who conceived his life and liberty aimed at when he found himself on an islet surrounded by the sea, instead of admiring, as his cicerone hoped, the unexpected change of scene, cried "Treason!" with all his might, and could not be pacified till he was rowed ashore.

At Lochmaben, he took an equally causeless alarm from a still slighter circumstance. Some vendisses, a fish peculiar to the loch, were presented to the royal table as a delicacy; but the king, who was not familiar with their appearance, concluded they were poisoned, and broke up the banquet "with most admired disorder."

EVENING.

It is the hour when from the boughs
The nightingale's high note is heard;
It is the hour when lovers' vows
Seem sweet in every whispered word;
And gentle winds, and waters near,
Make music to the lonely ear.

BYRON.

The Garden.

YOUNG plants of pelargoniums, fuchsias, etc., which will be required for autumnal window plants should now be moved into well-drained pots, and plunged into a border. Commence the grafting and budding of roses. Take up the bulbs of tulips, hyacinths, etc., as soon as the leaves grow yellow. Keep them dry in paper bags till the season for planting comes round again. Cuttings of verbenas and heliotropes now strike readily. Plentifully water newly-planted seedlings, and all hot-house plants.

Sow mustard and cress the same as last month. Sow the last crop of long-pod beans and peas for the season. Turnips are to be sown for succession in the first week of the month, and for a full autumn crop in the third week. Train the summer shoots of all sorts of wall and trellis trees. Net over cherry-trees.

A Way to Cool Water.

THE following is a simple mode of rendering water almost as cold as ice:—Let the jar, pitcher, or vessel used for water be surrounded with one or more folds of coarse cotton, to be constantly wet. The evaporation of the water will carry off the heat from the inside, and reduce it to a freezing-point. In India and other tropical climes, where ice cannot be procured, except at an expense which would be ruinous to all ordinary people, this is common.

Let every mechanic and labourer have at his place of employment two pitchers thus provided, and with lids or covers, one to contain water for drinking, the other for evaporation, and he can always have a supply of cold water in warm weather. Any person can test this by dipping a finger in water and holding it in the air on a warm day; after doing this three or four times he will find that in consequence of the evaporation his finger is uncomfortably cold.

STRAY NOTES.

It is a principal rule of life not to be too much addicted to any one thing.

6.—Suett, the actor, was very fond of gin, and he announced a landlady with a similar penchant. He would order her servant to procure supplies after this fashion:

"Betty, go and get a quartern loaf and half a quartern of gin."

Off went Betty: she was speedily recalled.

"Betty, make it half a quartern loaf, and a quartern of gin."

But Betty had not got fairly across the threshold ere the voice was again heard:

"Betty, on second thoughts, you may as well make it all gin!"

8.—The Duke of Cambridge, who died in 1850, had the habit of thinking aloud, which he shared with other members of his family.

He constantly attended the Sunday morning services at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, in the time of the Rev. W. J. E. Bennett, and occasionally was pleased to express in an audible tone his approbation of the proceedings. On one occasion, when the officiating clergyman pronounced the exhortation, "Let us pray," the duke bravely responded from his pew:—

"Ay, be sure; why not? let us pray, let us pray, let us pray!"

On another occasion, while the commandments were being read he was heard to remark:

"Steal, no, of coursenot; mustn't steal, mustn't steal, mustn't steal."

At the opera this eccentric habit betrayed itself in a still more marked and frequent way. Once he was heard all across the house to exclaim, as he moved his opera-glass round the circles;

"Why, I declare there are not half a dozen pretty girls in the house; not half a dozen, not half a dozen, not half a dozen!"

25.—Coleridge, among his many speculations, started a periodical in prose and verse, entitled The Watchman, with the motto, "that all might know the truth, and that the truth might make us free."

He watched in vain! Coleridge's incurable want of order and punctuality, and his philosophical theories, tired out and disgusted his readers, and the work was discontinued after the ninth number.

Of the unsaleable nature of this publication, he relates an amusing illustration. Happening one morning to rise at an earlier hour than usual, he observed his servant girl putting an extravagant quantity of paper into the grate in order to light the fire, and he mildly checked her for her wastefulness:

"Oh! sir," replied Nanny, "it's only The Watchman."

29.—It is said of Pope Urban VIII. that he had this fault in his character, viz., to think so highly of his own talents and judgment as to despise and ridicule every person who differed from him in opinion.

"O, what a prodigy of genius is that man," exclaimed his Holiness one day. "He thinks exactly as I do."

30.—Rising from a youth spent in comparatively humble circumstances, Thomas Gray became in his mature years a devoted college-student, a poet, a man of refined taste, and an exemplifier of all the virtues. His portrait gives us the idea of a good-looking man. He was unfitted, however, for success in society by an insuperable taciturnity. The only reproach ever intimated against him by his college associates was that of fastidiousness. Possibly, however, this arose from the fact that he shrunk from the coarse and boisterous enjoyments in which the greater number of them indulged.

TRUE RICHES.

Many a man is rich without money. Thousands of men with nothing in their pockets, and thousands without even a pocket are rich. A man born with a good sound constitution, a good stomach, a good heart and good limbs, a pretty good head-piece, is rich. Good bones are better than gold, tough muscles than silver, and nerves that flash fire and carry energy to every function are better than houses and land. It is better than a landed estate to have the right kind of a father and mother.

The Garden.

THE flowering of plants reaches its height this month. Continue to take up bulbs as the foliage decays, and place annuals or other plants in the places left vacant. In showery weather thin out annuals; they will supply the plants wanted for filling up. Pipings of pinks and carnations may be struck, and layers may be laid down about the middle of the month. Bud roses if conditions are favourable. Cut down pelargoniums that have done blooming, and take what cuttings are required; they will now strike readily. Lettuce plants and plants recently sown must be watered in dry weather. Peas and scarlet-runners now require striking, and potatoes must have the earth drawn round the roots. Plant out broccoli and celery. Roses, elder, lavender, and other plants are now gathered for distilling. Propagate medicinal and pot-herbs by slips and cuttings

The Herald of the Morn.

THE well-known habits of the skylark have made it an object of much popular interest. There is hardly anything in nature more cheerfully beautiful than the song of this bird, as he soars high above his nest on a sunny morning. It has been appreciated in all ages, and the poets, from Theocritus downwards, have been eager to pour out their feelings on the subject. Old Chaucer expresses himself thus beautifully :—

The merry lark, messenger of day,
Saleweth in her song the morrow gray,
And fiery Phœbus riseth up so bright,
That all the orient laugheth at the sight.

With Shakespeare the lark is the "herald of the morn," which is a term strictly true to nature, as the bird rises in the air and commences his song before day. He has been heard as early as two o'clock of a spring morning. Milton, who likewise calls him the herald lark, brings him into a series of the most beautiful images anywhere to be met with in poetry.

STRAY NOTES.

Nor love thy life, nor hate, but whilst thou liv'st
Live well; how long or short permit to heaven.
MILTON.

2.—The sharp reply Gainsborough gave a member of the bar when examined in the action brought by Disenfares against Vandergucht, possessess that peculiarity of genius and fancy for which he was so remarkable. Being questioned whether he thought there was not something necessary beside the eye to regulate an artist's opinion respecting a picture, his reply was "that he believed the veracity and integrity of a painter's eye was at least equal to a pleader's tongue."

8.—Spenser, the child of fancy, languished out his life in misery. "Lord Burleigh," says Granger, "who it is said prevented the queen giving him a hundred pounds, seems to have thought the lowest clerk in his office a more deserving person." Mr. Malone attempts to show that Spenser had a small pension; but the poet's querulous verses must not be forgotten :—

Full little knowest thou, that hast not try'd
What Hell it is, in suing long to bide ;
To lose good days—to waste long nights—
To fawn, to crouch, to wait, to ride, to run,
To speed, to give, to want, to be undone !

The poet of the "Faerie Queen" died in 1599.

14.—James Butler, second Duke of Ormond—famed for his extraordinary politeness, and who died in Madrid in 1745—when he was in the agony of death, fearing that the expression of his countenance in his pain might shock the friends standing by his bedside, said, as his last words, "Messieurs, j'espère que vous excuserez la grimace." ("Gentlemen, I hope that you will excuse the grimace.")

22.—It is curious to know that Bonivard, the "Prisoner of Chillon," was summoned several times for gambling and similar offences. Indeed, he seems to have been a rather jovial personage, and by no means the pathetic, sorrowful figure that Byron has drawn.

28.—In his day—he was born in 1788 and died in 1841—Hook was one of the most popular of men, his conversational talents making him much sought after in society. "Well worth his dinner to entertain a company," says a contemporary of a calculating turn of mind. In conversation his abilities shone even more conspicuously than they did in his writings. Lockhart mentions that he had seen him in company with very many of the most eminent men of his time, and never till he was near his end carried home the impression that he had been surpassed.

31.—The literary history of John Bunyan's famous work, The Pilgrim's Progress, is remarkable. It rapidly became popular. The first edition was printed in 1678, and before the year closed a second edition was called for. In the four following years it was reprinted six times.

Envy started the rumour that Bunyan did not or could not have written the book; to which, "with scorn to tell a lie," he answered:—

"It came from mine own heart, so to my head,
And thence into my fingers trickled;
Then to my pen, from whence immediately
On paper I did dribble it daintily.
Manner and matter too was all mine own,
Nor was it unto any mortal known,
Till I had done it. Nor did any then
By books, by wits, by tongues, or hand, or pen,
Add five words to it, or write half a line
Thereof—the whole and every whit is mine."

A DEAR SCHOOL.

Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other.

FRANKLIN.

The Garden.

EXAMINE bulbs that are out of the ground; they must not be allowed to become damp, for then they will mould and be of little value. Plants, such as fuchsias, which are meant to bloom in the window in autumn should be prevented from flowering now. Take off the tops of chrysanthemums. All bands tied round buds and grafts should now be lowered, and removed when they are no longer required. According to some it is better to pot auriculas now than in May. Sow cinerarias, petunias, and calceolarias; if left to the spring these plants will not flower till the following year. Plant out biennial stocks in the borders where they are intended to bloom. Pick off dead leaves and reduce stray growth.

Sow lettuce to stand the winter, and spinach and cauliflower, and transplant lettuce and every sort of cabbage. Hoe and thin turnips. A few coleworts may still be planted.

As slugs and other vermin will now be making deplorable ravages constant attention will be required to subdue them.

Garden Sage.

GARDEN SAGE, or salvia officinalis, is so called from salveo, to be safe, on account of the sanative properties with which it was supposed to be fraught. Sage is now used principally in culinary preparations.

There are several varieties, as, 1. The common green. 2. Wormwood. 3. Green, with variegated leaves. 4. Red, with variegated leaves. 5. Painted, or parti-coloured. 6. Spanish, or lavender-leaved. 7. Red.

A dry, moderately fertile soil, is best suited to their growth, in a rather sheltered situation. Sage is propagated by cuttings of the young shoots from the sides of the branches, sometimes also by rooted offsets, and likewise by seed. The cuttings may be either of the preceding or same year's growth; if of the first they may be planted in April, but of the latter not until the close of May or middle of June.

The shoots of the same year are usually employed, as they more readily emit roots, and assume a free growth.

STRAY NOTES.

Some men, like pictures, are fitter for a corner than a full light.—SENECA.

3.—Oliver Cromwell, in the last year of his life, in his last speech to his last abortive Parliament, publicly proclaimed that his bitter experience corroborated the declaration of the poetic sage. "I can say," he declared, "in the presence of God, in comparison with whom we are but like poor creeping ants upon the earth, I would have been glad to have lived under my woodside, to have kept a flock of sheep, rather than undertaken such a government as this!"

7.—Pope Adrian wrote the following sad epitaph for himself:—

Adrianus, Papa VI.,
hic situs est
Qui nihil sibi infelicius
In vita
Quam quod imperaret
Duxit.

Which may be rendered in English thus:—

Pope Adrian VI. lies here, who experienced nothing more unhappy in life than that he commanded.

9.—The battle of Flodden resulted in the defeat and death of the Scottish king, James IV., the slaughter of nearly thirty of his nobles and chiefs, and the loss of about 10,000 men. It was an overthrow which spread sorrow and dismay through Scotland, and was long remembered as one of the greatest calamities ever sustained by the nation. "With all tenderness for romantic impulse and chivalric principle," says a well-known writer, "a modern man, even of the Scottish nation, is forced to admit that the Flodden enterprise of James IV. was an example of gigantic folly, righteously punished."

13.—The fall of Wolfe was noble indeed. He received a wound in the head, but covered it from his soldiers with his handkerchief. A second ball struck him; that, too, he dissembled. A third hitting him in the breast, he sank under the anguish, and was carried behind the ranks. Yet, fast as life ebbed out, his whole anxiety centred on the fortune of the day. He begged to be borne nearer to the action; but his sight being dimmed by the approach of death, he entreated to be told what they who supported him saw. He was answered that the enemy gave ground. He eagerly repeated the question, heard the enemy was totally routed, cried, "I am satisfied!" and expired.

18.—There is a candid opinion of Dr. Johnson and his biographer Boswell given by the mother of Lord Malmesbury. She is giving an account of a dinner party at her house at Twickenham in April, 1779.

"Tuesday.—Dr. Johnson, his fellow-traveller through the Scotch Western Islands, Mr. Boswell, and Sir Joshua Reynolds dined here. I have long wished to be in company with this said Johnson; his conversation is the same as his writing, but in a dreadful voice and manner. He is certainly amusing as a novelty, but seems not possessed of any benevolence, is beyond all description awkward, and more beastly in his dress and person than anything I ever beheld. He feeds nastily and ferociously, and eats quantities unthankfully. As for Boswell, he appears a low-bred kind of being."

21.—The famous Bishop Jewell had, by application and industry, so improved his retentive powers that he could readily repeat anything that he had written after once reading it over; and therefore usually at the ringing of the bell he began to commit his sermon to heart, and kept what he learnt so firmly, that he used to say if he were to make a speech premeditatedly before a thousand auditors who were shouting or fighting all the while, he could repeat the whole of what he had designed to deliver. Many barbarous and hard names out of a calendar, and forty strange words, Welsh, Irish, etc., after once reading, or twice at the most, with a short meditation, he could repeat, both forwards and backwards, without any hesitation.

Sir Francis Bacon reading to him only the last clauses of ten lines in Erasmus' Paraphrase, in a confused and dismembered manner, he, after a small pause, rehearsed in the right way, and without a single mistake.

The Garden.

DAHLIAS and hardy annuals are still in flower. Place auriculas under shelter for winter at the end of the month, but they should still have as much light and air as is consistent with shielding them from frost and heavy rains. Take cactuses indoors, and give them very little water. Make cuttings of Chinese roses. Plant out pinks in the beds where they are meant to flower. Thrift, daisy, or gentianella edgings may now be planted: the earth should be pressed firmly round the roots by beating it with the back of a spade. Dog's tooth violet, narcissus, crocus, snowdrop, and such like bulbs, if out of the ground, must now be planted. Earth up celery, and plant lettuces in a sheltered border for winter use. This is the best time for forming new beds of horse radish. Plant endive and lettuce. Lift onions, and place them on a dry border or gravel walk.

What is the Use of Dew?

THE importance of dew to vegetable life may be appreciated by the fact that some plants derive the principal portion of their nutriment from the aqueous atmosphere, and that all are more or less dependent upon the same source. The anatomy of their leaves displays a structure adapted to the absorption of this fluid. Each of the different grasses draws from the atmosphere during the night a supply of dew to recruit its energies, dependent upon its form and peculiar radiating power. Every flower has a power of radiation of its own, subject to changes during the day and night, and the deposition of moisture on it is regulated by the peculiar law which this radiating power obeys; and this power will be influenced by the aspect which the flower presents to the sky, unfolding to the contemplative mind the most beautiful example of creative wisdom. Dew is deposited over the earth's surface on comparatively clear and calm nights. It is not deposited in either cloudy or windy weather.

Is spotless reputation.
SHAKESPEARE.

1.—The month on which we enter to-day was so called from being the eighth in the year according to the old Latin calendar. It was by our Saxon ancestors styled Wyn moneth, or the wine-month. Referring to this epithet, an old writer remarks, "and albeit they had not anciently wines made in Germany, yet in this season had they them from divers countries adjoining."

October was also called by the ancient Germans Winter-fyllith, from the approach of winter with the full moon of the month.

In ancient Saxon calendars this month is sometimes allegorised by the figure of a husbandman carrying a sack on his shoulders and sowing corn, in allusion to the practice of sowing the winter grain, which takes place in October. In other old almanacs, the sport of hunting is adopted as emblematical of this, the last month of autumn.

5.—"I wrote the 'Castle of Otranto,' says Walpole, "in eight days, or rather, eight nights; for my general hours of composition are from ten o'clock at night till two in the morning, when I am sure not to be disturbed by visitants. While I am writing I take several cups of coffee."

8.—Alfieri, the day before he died, was persuaded to see a priest; and when he came, he said to him with great affability, "Have the kindness to look in to-morrow—I trust death will wait four-and-twenty hours."

20.—Visitors to St. Paul's Cathedral, of which, as is so well known, Sir Christopher Wren was the architect, will see over the north door the following lines:—

Si monumentum quæris, circumspice.

(If his monument you seek, look around.)

23.—For a lover of books, and for one who had picked up a few, Lord Jeffrey's collection was most wretched, and so ill cared for that the want even of volumes never disturbed him. The science of binding he knew nothing about, and therefore despised, and most of his books were unbound. These slatternly habits all arose from his believing that books were only meant to be read; and that, therefore, so as their words were visible, nothing else was required.

25.—Walking was Macaulay's favourite recreation, but he seems to have been unable to sever himself from his books. He once said that he would like nothing so well as to bury himself in some great library, and never pass a waking hour without a book before him. Certainly he could never walk without his book. "He walked about London reading; he roamed through the lanes of Surrey reading; and even the new and surprising spectacle of the sea—so suggestive of reverie and brooding thought—could not seduce him from his books."

30.—When Admiral Vernon was attacking Porto Bello, with his six ships only, as is described on the medal struck on the occasion, he observed a fine young man in appearance, who with the most intrepid courage, attended with the most perfect calmness, was always in that part of the ship which was most engaged.

After the firing had ceased, he sent his captain to request he would attend upon him, which he immediately obeyed; and the admiral entering into conversation, discovered by his answers and observations that he possessed more abilities than usually fall to the lot of mankind. Upon his asking his name, the young man told him it was George Washington; and the admiral, on his return home, strongly recommended him to the attention of the Admiralty.

This great man when he built his house in America, out of gratitude to his first benefactor, named it "Mount Vernon," and at this moment it is called so.

OCTOBER RHYMES.

"A good October and a strong blast
To blow the hog acorn and mast."

"Many haws,
Many snaws,
Many sloes,
Many cold toes."

The Garden.

CHINESE chrysanthemums, Michaelmas daisies of various kinds, mignonette, Russian and Neapolitan violets are now in bloom. Dahlias, hollyhocks, etc., keep their blooming till injured by the frost. Prepare beds for tulips, hyacinths, etc. They should be dug to the depth of eighteen inches, and well drained. Take up scarlet lobelias, divide them, and plant them in pots for the winter: they are apt to decay if left out.

Dig up parsnips, carrots, potatoes, and beets. Spinach beds should be weeded out, and August sown lettuce planted out, if not done last month. Winter crops are now being sown in the field. Potatoes and other vegetables are being housed. Fences should now be repaired, and drains cleaned, and the garden should be kept as neat as possible. Stack or house wood for firing.

Notes on the Dairy.

THE proper construction and management of a dairy are questions of considerable importance to the farmer. It should be situated, if possible, on a dry porous soil. The room should be made of brick or stone, with a floor of the same materials, for the sake of its being more readily and frequently washed with cold water, not only on the score of cleanliness, but that the temperature of the place may in summer be kept down to the most advantageous degree. And to this end, the dairy is commonly placed on the northern side of the house, where it may be readily shaded from the sun by other more elevated buildings, or by trees.

A temperature between 50° and 60° is the best, and the less occasion there is to reduce the temperature of the dairy by washing the floor with cold water the better, since, amongst other disadvantages, the damp air thus produced is not so advantageous as a dry atmosphere for the retention of sweetness in milk and cream. The dairy house should be far removed from stagnant ponds and offensive drains; and furnished with wire gauze windows, by which insects are excluded without impairing the necessary ventilation.

PLATO.

5.—The observance of "Guy Fawkes Day" is not now what it used to be. The universal mode of celebrating it at one time throughout England was the dressing up of a scarecrow figure, parading it through the streets, and at nightfall burning it in a huge bonfire. The image was intended to represent Guy Fawkes, in accordance with which idea it always carried a dark lantern in one hand, and a bundle of matches in the other. The procession visited the different houses in the neighbourhood in succession, repeating the time honoured rhyme—

"Remember, remember!
The fifth of November,
The Gunpowder treason and plot;
There is no reason
Why the Gunpowder treason
Should ever be forgot!"

Numerous variations and additions were made in different parts of the country.

One invariable custom was always maintained on these occasions—that of soliciting money from the passers-by in the formula, "Pray remember Guy!" "Please to remember Guy!" or "Please to remember the bonfire!"

6.—Alexander the Great kept a ring-necked parroquet in a golden cage of fabulous value, and is thus, among his other claims to fame, the first bird-fancier of whom history has preserved any record.

14.—Paul Scarron was one of the heroic invalids of literature. He was of the company of the Heines. He compared his own poor distorted body to the letter Z. He was always cracking jokes about his infirmities when he was not meditating suicide. He tried all the quack remedies of his day, from the "gold cure" (now revived, it seems, in the United States for the benefit of dipsomaniacs) to tripe-baths. But, in the end, he admitted that the only thing which gave him permanent relief was profane swearing.

17.—The Earl of Buchan considered himself quite superior in genius to his younger brothers, and he was rather shocked that they had got on in the world by following a trade. Yet at times he would boast of their elevation, taking all the credit of it to himself. He said to an English nobleman who visited him at Dryburgh, "My brothers, Harry and Tom, are certainly extraordinary men, but they owe everything to me."

This observation occasioning an involuntary look of surprise in his guest, he continued, "Yes, it is true; they owe everything to me. On my father's death they pressed me for a small annual allowance. I knew that this would have been their ruin, by relaxing their industry. So, making a sacrifice of my inclination to gratify them, I refused to give them a farthing, and they have both thriven ever since—owing everything to me."

21.—Upon one occasion the Ettrick Shepherd, with the true waywardness of a poet, took umbrage at Sir Walter Scott for some imaginary slight or neglect, and refused for a long time to speak to him. The baronet knew his man, and said nothing till Hogg's better feelings reawakened, and induced him to write a long explanatory and apologetic letter. Sir Walter's answer was highly characteristic:—

"Dear Jamie,—Now that you have come to your senses, come over to dinner.—Yours, Walter Scott."

WINTER.

Fled is the blasted verdure of the fields:
And, shrunk into their beds, the flowery race
Their sunny robes resign. Even what remained
Of stronger fruits falls from the naked tree.
And woods, fields, orchards, all around,
The desolated prospect thrills the soul.—THOMSON.

The Garden.

THERE may be flowers in the garden in this and the following month. The common monthly rose and several varieties of laurestine are in blossom. Evergreen shrubs and trees are now in great beauty. Take up dahlia roots carefully in fine weather and label them. Let the roots dry gradually, and then lay them in a shallow box: cover them with sand, and house them in any dry place where they are free from frost. Plant tulips and hyacinths in beds as early in the month as possible. Plant them three or four inches deep and six inches apart. Stocks of the wild rose should now be obtained from the hedge.

Finish taking up potatoes, carrots, beet, and parsnips. Take up early broccoli, endive, late cauliflower, and lettuces, and lay them in an open shed, or in old cucumber or melon pits, which will protect them from frost, and afford a supply during winter. This is the month for flooding water meadows.

Rosemary.

THE botanical name of Rosemary, Rosmarinus officinalis, comes from ros, dew, and marinus, of the sea, on account of its maritime habitat, poetically implying "the dew of the ocean." There are three varieties the green, golden-striped, and silver-striped.

The first is the one in general cultivation. Rosemary thrives best on a poor, gravelly soil, in which there is a mixture of old mortar, or other calcareous matters. In such, or when the plants are self-raised on an old wall, they will bear our severest winters; but in a rich soil they become succulent, lose much of their aromatic nature, and perish in frost.

For the green variety, the situation may be open, but the other two being tender, require to be planted beneath a south wall, or in pots, to be allowed the shelter of a green-house in winter. It may be propagated by cuttings and rooted slips during any of the spring months, or by layers during the summer. But the finest plants are raised from seed.

STRAY NOTES.

Our happiness in this world depends on the affections we are able to inspire.

11.—Of all who have ever exercised sovereign sway, few have presented a more sad spectacle in the end than Theodore, King of Corsica. He died in London, in exile, and was buried in the churchyard of St. Ann's, Westminster, where the following epitaph, composed by Horace Walpole, was inscribed on a tablet, with a diadem carved at the summit:—

Near this place is interred
THEODORE,
KING OF CORSICA,
Who died in this parish,
December 11, 1756,
Immediately after leaving the King's Bench Prison,
By the benefit of the Act of Insolvency;
In consequence of which
He registered the Kingdom of Corsica for the use of his creditors.

The grave, great teacher, to a level brings
Heroes and beggars, galley-slaves and kings.
But Theodore this moral learned ere dead:
Fate poured its lessons on his living head,
Bestowed a kingdom, and denied him bread.

13.—The last moments of Dr. Johnson have been thus described by Macaulay:—"Burke parted from him with deep emotion. Windham sat much in the sick room, arranged the pillows, and sent his own servant to watch at night by the bed. Frances Burney, whom the old man had cherished with fatherly kindness, stood weeping at the door; while Langton, whose piety eminently qualified him to be an adviser and comforter at such a time, received the last pressure of his friend's hand within his own. At length, the mouth, the moment dreaded through so many years came close, the dark cloud passed away from Johnson's mind. His temper became unusually patient and gentle; he ceased to think with terror of death, and of that which is beyond death; and he spoke much of the mercy of God and the propitiation of Christ. In this serene frame of mind he died on the 13th of December, 1784. He was laid a week later in Westminster Abbey, among the eminent men of whom he had been the historian, Cowley and Denham, Dryden and Congreve, Gay, Prior, and Addison."

19.—Turner, the greatest nature-painter of this or any other age, spent hours upon hours in mere contemplation of nature without using his pencil at all. It is said of him that he was seen to spend a whole day, sitting upon a rock, and throwing pebbles into a lake; and when at evening his fellow-painters showed their day's sketches and rallied him upon having done nothing, he answered them:—

"I have done this, at least; I have learnt how a lake looks when pebbles are thrown into it."

24.—In his person William Falconer, the poet, was about five feet seven inches in height; of a thin light make, with a dark weather-beaten complexion, and rather what is termed hard features, being considerably marked with the small-pox; his hair was of a brownish hue.

In point of address his manner was blunt, awkward, and forbidding; but he spoke with great fluency; and his simple yet impressive diction was couched in words which reminded his hearers of the terseness of Swift.

Though Falconer possessed a warm and friendly disposition, he was fond of controversy and inclined to satire . . . He often assured Governor Hunter that his education had been confined merely to reading English, writing, and a little arithmetic.

TO-MORROW.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this pretty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time.
SHAKESPEARE.

The Garden.

THE work to be done in the flower-garden is much the same as last month. Tea roses that are in exposed situations should be taken up, and placed safely out of the reach of frost. Any fuchsias that are to remain out all the winter should be cut down and have their roots covered with litter or coal ashes. In frosty weather sprinkle light litter over any choice things in open beds. Make plantations of rhubarb, sea-kale, asparagus, and horse-radish. Sow early peas and beans on dry warm slopes. Dig round old fruit-trees. If any trees grow too luxuriantly to bear well, root-prune them. Continue, if necessary, to make new drains, to improve water-courses, and to plant hedges. Turn up the ground thoroughly for exposure to the frost and snow. Inspect the fruit in the store-room at frequent and regular intervals, and remove whatever is found to be in a state of decay.

Everything likely to suffer from the frost, such as young cabbages, sown late for spring planting, should be well protected with mats, straw, dry fern, or long dry manure.

MEMORANDA FOR DECEMBER.

WORDS TO WOMEN.

What's woman's beauty but an air divine?—YOUNG.

IT is difficult to say what constitutes beauty in woman. The Sandwich Islanders estimate women by weight. The Chinese require them to have deformed feet and black teeth. A girl must be tattooed sky-blue, and wear a nose ring to suit a South Sea Islander. African princes require their brides to have their teeth filed like those of a saw; and thus goes the world, the criterion of beauty differing with the latitude and longitude.

The poorest girls in the world are those who have never been taught to work. There are thousands of them. Rich parents have petted them; they have been taught to despise labour and depend upon others for a living, and are perfectly helpless. The most forlorn woman belongs to this class. It is the duty of parents to protect their daughters from this deplorable condition. They do them a great wrong if they neglect it. Every daughter should be taught to earn her own living. The rich as well as the poor require this training. The wheel of fortune rolls swiftly round — the rich are likely to become poor, and the poor rich. Skill added to labour is no disadvantage to the rich, and is indispensable to the poor. Well-to-do parents must educate their daughters to work; no reform is more imperative than this.

If every girl would learn to be self-supporting in an emergency, the sum total of human misery would be immensely reduced. If every girl, regardless of her father's pecuniary condition, would put her hand to some difficult employment—would acquire special training as milliner or dressmaker, as painter or sculptor, as printer or bookbinder, as designer or pattern-maker, as architect or decorator, as cabinet-maker or jeweller, as shoemaker or hatter, learning some of these myriad trades to which she is by nature quite as well adapted as are the young men around her, she would achieve for herself a most enviable position of independence. She would not, indeed, change her nature, but her art; she would not learn to discard, permanently, that domestic life for which she is supremely fitted, or to ignore matrimony and despise the men; but she would occupy a coign of vantage from which she could exercise dignified choice in marriage, instead of being compelled to accept an unworthy husband from a position of dependence.

BUT ONE.

The night has a thousand eyes,
The day but one;
Yet the light of the bright world dies
With the dying sun.

The mind has a thousand eyes,
The heart but one;
Yet the light of a whole life dies
When love is done.

ANON.

It has been said that women are less capable of real friendship than men, and certainly historical friendships, such as existed between even Greeks of the higher type, do not appear to have been known amongst women.

Every girl should be brought up to mend her own clothes, and do a certain share of a younger sister's or brother's, or something for her parents. Even where people are rich enough to keep lady's-maids, it does not follow that their children will be able to do so to the end of their lives, and many a girl has married and gone out with good prospects to Australia, South Africa, and other colonies, where no one can be got to perform these little services for either love or money, and if not able to do them for herself she has been in a very poor plight.

Addressing girls, Mr. Ruskin gives the following counsel:—"Dress as plainly as your parents will allow you, but in bright colours (if they become you), and in the best materials — that is to say, in those which wear longest. When you are really in want of a new dress buy it (or make it) in the fashion; but never quit an old one merely because it has become unfashionable. And if the fashion be costly you must not follow it. You may wear broad stripes or narrow, bright colours or dark, short petticoats or long (in moderation), as the public wish you; but you must not buy yards of useless stuff to make a knot or a flounce of, nor drag them behind you over the ground. And your walking dress must never touch the ground at all. If you can afford it, get your dresses made by a good dressmaker, with the utmost attainable precision and perfection; but let this good dressmaker be a poor person living in the country—not a rich person living in a large house in London. Learn dress-making yourself with pains and time, and use a part of the every-day needle work, making as pretty dresses as you can for poor people who have not time nor taste to make them nicely for themselves. You are to show them in your own wearing what is most right and graceful, and to help them to choose what will be prettiest and most becoming in their own station. If they see you never try to dress above yours, they will not try to dress above theirs." We may question one or two of Mr. Ruskin's statements and suggestions, but on the whole he here gives wise counsel.

A LAWYER'S TALES.

A lawyer's dealings should be just and fair.—COWPER.

DURING the trial of a woman for witchcraft, one of the witnesses gave evidence that the prisoner could fly. The humane and sensible judge, Powell, told her, "so she might if she would; he knew of no law against it." When Jane Wenham was tried at the Hertford assizes, for the same offence, Mr. Bragge, in his evidence on her trial, declared, on the faith of a clergyman, that he believed her to be a witch; whereupon the same judge told him, that "therefore, on the truth of a judge, he took him to be no conjurer."

A physician of an acrimonious disposition, and having a thorough hatred of lawyers, was in company with a barrister, and in the course of conversation, reproached the profession of the latter with the use of phrases utterly unintelligible. "For example," said he, "I never could understand what you lawyers mean by docking an entail." "That is very likely," answered the lawyer, "but I will explain it to you; it is doing what you doctors never consent to—suffering a recovery."

In Turkey the law which condemns the murderer to death used to permit, at the same time, the nearest relations of the murdered (one of whom was on these occasions the executioner) to grant him a pardon. A Turk, in haste to inherit, had murdered his father, and was condemned, on the strongest proofs, to lose his head. One of his friends hastened to the judge, with a large sum of money, where he learned that the sentence had been already pronounced. Not discouraged by that, he continued to press the Cadi, whom the sight of such a treasure had already persuaded. "I cannot," said he, to his client, "acquit your friend without a proof of his innocence stronger than the evidence on which he has been convicted. Be bold enough to declare yourself the murderer of his father, procure two witnesses, and I will condemn you to undergo the punishment to which he has been sentenced; he will be immediately reinstated in all his rights, and have the power of granting you a pardon." The undertaking was certainly hazardous; no great confidence could be reposed in a parricide. Yet the convicted criminal pardoned the pretended murderer, and this villainy was completely successful.

A peasant newly arrived in London, asked what building that was, pointing to where the law courts are held. "It is a mill," said an attorney, to quiz the bumpkin. "I thought as much," replied the countryman, "for I see a good many asses at the door with sacks."

After Fitzgibbon and Scott, of the Irish bar, had been raised to the Attorney- and Solicitor-Generalship, they were invited to dine with an attorney who first brought them into notice in the Four Courts by giving them briefs. They both accepted his invitation, not wishing to discard an old friend; but, as he lived in an unfashionable part of Dublin, they did not like to have noticed "the lowly means by which they did ascend." Fitzgibbon drove to an adjacent street, there alighted from his carriage, and, walking sneakingly towards the attorney's house, he met Scott; they passed without recognition; to avoid detection they walked to the end of the street in opposite directions, and turned. Both met again, but finding they were engaged to the same host, Scott said to Fitzgibbon, "Ah! Mr. Attorney-General, I see we are both engaged to the same place, do not be ashamed; pray let me show you the way." Then they took the alley which led to their old benefactor's house, which their newly-born vanity had taken pains to conceal.

"Papa," says a lawyer's son, "what's an In-ter-rog-a-to-ry?" "My dear," says his learned father, "an Interrogatory is a very explicit method for obtaining a correct answer to a simple question. Thus:—'Whether John Jones, on such a day, and at such a place, did, should, could, would, might, or ought; or whether he didn't, shouldn't, couldn't, wouldn't, mightn't, or oughtn't; or if he didn't, shouldn't, couldn't, wouldn't, mightn't, or oughtn't, why didn't he, shouldn't he, couldn't he, wouldn't he, mightn't he, or oughtn't he; and if not on such a day, and at such a place, then whether at some other, and what, day and place he did, should, could, would, might, or ought; or whether he didn't, shouldn't, couldn't, wouldn't, mightn't, or oughtn't; or under some other, and what peculiar, or if not peculiar, under some other, and what, circumstances, and if not, why not, or how otherwise do it.'"

HONOUR OR LIFE.

Poor frightened men at sea,
To save their lives, cast all their goods away.
In storms of fortune, where there is a strife
Which shall be saved, man's honour or his life?
Who would preserve this tattered bark from fate
But sink the vessel to preserve the freight?

SIR ROBERT HOWARD.

BY COACH AND ON HORSEBACK

Much use of a coach makes us lose the benefit of our limbs.—SENECA.

COACHES to be let for hire were first established in London in 1625. At that time there were only twenty, which did not stand in the street, but at the principal inns. Their number increased gradually, and in 1813 there were twelve hundred in London. Mail coaches were first established about the year 1783.

A ride remarkable for what it accomplished in the daylight of three days, was that of Robert Cary, from London to Edinburgh, to inform King James of the death of Queen Elizabeth. Cary set out on horseback from Whitehall between nine and ten o'clock of Thursday forenoon. That night he reached Doncaster, 155 miles. Next day he got to his own house at Witherington, where he attended to various matters of business. On the Saturday, setting out early, he would have reached Edinburgh by mid-day, had he not been thrown and kicked by his horse. As it was, he knelt by King James's bedside at Holyrood, and saluted him King of England, soon after the King had retired to rest; being a ride of fully four hundred miles in three days.

Some idea of the old fashion of travelling may be gathered from Pennant's "Journey from Chester to London." "In March, 1739-40," says Pennant, "I changed my Welsh school for one nearer to the capital, and travelled in the Chester stage — then no despicable vehicle for gentlemen. The first day, with much labour, we got from Chester to Whitchurch, twenty miles; the second day, to the Welsh Harp; the third, to Coventry; the fourth, to Northampton; the fifth, to Dunstable; and as a wondrous effort, on the last to London before the commencement of night. The strain and labour of six good horses, sometimes eight, drew us through the sloughs of Mireden and many other places. We were constantly out two hours before day, and as late at night; and in the depth of winter proportionately later. Families who travelled in their own carriages were dragged up in the same number of days by three sets of able horses. The single gentlemen, then a hardy race, equipped in jack-boots and trousers up to their middle, rode post through thick and thin, and, guarded against the mire, defied the frequent stumble and fall, and pursued their journey with alacrity."

In Scotland, previous to the time of the civil war, coaches were only used by persons high in the state. It is very curious to find that the same sort of complaints made by persons interested in coaching respecting the introduction of steam locomotives, were made when coaches were introduced. Taylor, the water-poet, complains, in the reign of Charles I., that large retinues of men were now given up by the great, since they had begun to use coaches. Ten, twenty, thirty, fifty, yea a hundred proper serving men, were transformed, he says, into two or three animals.

The length of time consumed in journeys by even the best kind of carriages of past times is now matter for surprise. The stage-coach which went between London and Oxford in the reign of Charles II., required two days, though the space is only fifty-eight miles. That to Exeter (186¾ miles) required four days. In 1703, when Prince George of Denmark went from Windsor to Petworth to meet Charles III. of Spain, the distance being about forty miles, he required fourteen hours for the journey, the last nine miles taking six. The person who records this fact, says, that the long time was the more surprising, as, except when overturned, or when stuck fast in the mire, his Royal Highness made no stop during the journey.

PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE.

Threefold the stride of Time, from first to last!
Loitering slow, the Future creepeth—
Arrow-swift, the Present sweepeth—
And motionless for ever stands the Past.

In 1742, stage-coaches must have been more numerous in England than in Charles II.'s time; but it does not appear that they moved any faster. The journey from London to Birmingham (116 miles) then occupied nearly three days, as appears from the following advertisement:—"The Litchfield and Birmingham stage-coach set out this morning (Monday, April 12, 1742), from the Rose Inn, Holborn Bridge, London, and will be at the Angel, and the Hen and Chickens, in the High Town, Birmingham, on Wednesday next, to dinner; and goes the same afternoon to Litchfield. It returns to Birmingham on Thursday morning to breakfast, and gets to London on Saturday night; and so will continue every week regularly, with a good coach and able horses." Thus the whole week was occupied in a journey to and from Litchfield by Birmingham, an entire space of probably not more than two hundred and forty miles—that is, at an average of forty miles a day.

ANECDOTES OF ARTISTS.

Painters and poets our indulgence claim.—HORACE.

THE celebrated Benjamin West relates that his mother once kissed him eagerly when he showed her a likeness he had sketched of his baby sister; and he adds, "That kiss made me a painter."

In England it is thought to smack of Philistinism for a man to be particular about the likeness of his portrait. A year or two ago people made very merry over the millionaire who, having engaged one day with a great artist to paint him for one thousand guineas, wrote the next morning to cry off the bargain because he had seen an enlarged photograph of a friend in Regent Street so very like that he despaired of getting paint to equal it; "besides which," he added naively, "this style costs only five pounds."

A miller, who lately quitted his mill to keep a public-house, sent to a painter to paint him a sign, on which he would have a mill. "I must have the miller looking out of the window." "It shall be done," said the painter. "But, as I was never seen to be idle, you must make him pop in his head, if anyone looks at him." This was promised, and in due time the sign was finished and brought home. "It is well done," said mine host; "but where is the miller?" "Oh!" replied the painter, "he popped in his head when you looked."

Sir John Sinclair happening once to dine in company with Wilkie, the painter, that distinguished artist was asked, in the course of conversation, if any particular circumstances had led him to adopt his profession. Sir John inquired, "Had your father, mother, or any of your relations a turn for painting? or what led you to follow that art?" To which Wilkie replied, "The truth is, Sir John, that you made me a painter." "How I!" exclaimed the baronet, "I never had the pleasure of meeting you before." Wilkie then gave the following explanation:—"When you were drawing up the Statistical Account of Scotland, my father, who was a clergyman in Fife, had much correspondence with you respecting his parish, in the course of which you sent him a coloured drawing of a soldier, in the uniform of your Highland Fencible Regiment. I was so delighted with the sight that I was constantly drawing copies of it, and thus insensibly was transformed into a painter."

Painting is the intermediate somewhat between a thought and a thing.

Kneller was one day conversing about his art, when he gave the following neat reason for preferring portraiture. "Painters of history," said he, "make the dead live, and do not begin to live themselves till they are dead. I paint the living, and they make me live!"

When Megabizus, a Persian general, one day was conducted to the studio of Apelles, he began talking about light and shade, and other things peculiar to the painter's art. Apelles bore with him for some time, but at last took him up, and said to him, "Sir, my pupils there, who are grinding colours, gazed at you when you entered, admiring your splendid dress and the gold that glitters on it, so long as you held your tongue; but now I cannot answer that they will not smile at you, nay even laugh, to hear you discoursing on a subject so much out of your sphere."

Artists often meet with strange adventures. Mulready says:—"One bright moonlight night, in my student days, I was walking in a street on the outskirts of London, little better than a country lane, when a man came out of the shadow thrown by a large tree and, producing a pistol, addressed me in the usual robber fashion with—'Your watch and money, please!' 'I am a poor artist,' said I. 'See, these are my drawings. I have no watch; I have never been able to buy one.' 'Your money, then, and be quick!' All this time I was watching the fellow's face; it was very white, and I think he was more frightened than I was. I gave him all the silver I had about me. He said 'Good-night' civilly enough, and started off towards London. I made the best of my way home, and before I went to bed I drew the man's face very carefully. The next morning I went to Bow Street with my drawing, hoping it might be recognised by the officers there. But no! The face, they said, was new to them. 'If you will leave the likeness here, sir,' said the chief detective, 'we may perhaps come across the person it represents.' That very soon happened. A fortnight had scarcely passed before I was called on to identify the man who had robbed me. He had been arrested for murder, and was easily convicted.'

LEND A HAND.

Lend a hand! Do not think that because yours is small,
Or because from its fingers no riches may fall,
It was meant you should render no
succour at all.

JULIA WOLCOTT.

ABOVE ALL THINGS, STUDY.

You can never be wise unless you love reading.—Dr. Johnson.

WISE men are instructed by reason; men of less understanding by experience; the most ignorant by necessity; and beasts by nature.

All sorts of wisdom and useful knowledge may be obtained by a plain man of sense, without what is commonly called learning.

A man's nature runs either to herbs or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one and destroy the other.

It is impossible to make people understand their ignorance; for it requires knowledge to perceive it, and therefore he that can perceive it hath it not.

Consult the ancients, listen to the aged. He is little wise who has only his own wisdom, and little learned is he who has only his own learning.

The mind has a certain vegetative power, which cannot be wholly idle. If it is not laid out and cultivated into a beautiful garden, it will of itself shoot up in weeds of a wild growth.

Variety of studies, so far from weakening the mind, is a powerful means of promoting its energy and growth. We seldom meet with persons of vigorous understanding whose range of thought has been confined chiefly to one department.

Infinite toil would not enable you to sweep away a mist, but by ascending a little you may often look over it altogether. So it is with our moral improvement: we wrestle fiercely with a vicious habit, which would have no hold upon us if we ascend into a higher atmosphere.

It appears unaccountable that our teachers generally have directed their instructions to the head, with very little attention to the heart. From Aristotle down to Locke, books without number have been composed for cultivating and improving the understanding; but few, in proportion, for cultivating and improving the affections.

Studies nourish youth, delight old age, are the ornament of prosperity, and the solace and refuge of adversity; they are delectable at home and not burdensome abroad; they gladden us at night, and on our journeys, and in the country. Nobody knows the strength of his mind and the force of steady and regular application till he has tried. This is certain, he that sets out upon weak legs will not only go farther, but go stronger too, than one who with a vigorous constitution and firm limbs only sits still.

If you earnestly wish to obtain accurate information, never rely upon the accounts of others when you can use your own eyes and ears.

There is nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little: and therefore men should remedy suspicion by procuring to know more, and not to keep their suspicions in smother.

Facts are the landmarks to the understanding; he who is without them resembles a mariner who sails along a treacherous coast without either rudder or compass.

"The chief art of learning," says Locke, "is to attempt but little at a time. The widest excursions of the mind are made by short flights frequently repeated; the most lofty fabrics of science are formed by the continued accumulations of single propositions."

There is one circumstance we would preach up, morning, noon, and night, to young persons, for the management of their understanding. Whatever you are by nature, keep to it, never desert your own line of talent. Be what nature intended you for, and you will succeed; be anything else, and you will be ten thousand times less than nothing.

Preserve proportion in your reading, keep your views of men and things extensive, and depend upon it a mixed knowledge is not a superficial one. As far as it goes, the views that it gives are true; but he who reads deeply in one class of writers only, gets views which are almost sure to be perverted, and which are not only narrow but false.

Always have a book within your reach, which you may catch up at your odd minutes. Resolve to edge in a little reading every day, if it is but a single sentence. If you can give fifteen minutes a day, it will be felt at the end of the year. Thoughts take up no room. When they are right they afford a portable pleasure, with which one may travel or labour without any trouble or encumbrance.

Those who have read of everything are thought to understand everything too; but it is not always so. Reading furnishes the mind only with materials of knowledge: it is thinking makes what we read ours. We are of the ruminating kind; and it is not enough to cram ourselves with a great load of collections: unless we chew them over again, they will not give us strength and nourishment.

KNOW THYSELF.

One bowing to me, I'd seen long ago,
Said I, "Who art?" He said, "I do not know."
I said, "I know thee." "I," said he, "know you."
But he who knows himself I never knew.

OLD STORIES RETOLD.

I say the tale as 'twas said to me.—SCOTT.

A GENTLEMAN at the table of the great Condé, having related several wonderful stories of a king of Persia, his Highness requested him to continue the recital of the life of so great a man; but the gentleman perceiving the servants had begun to clear the table during his narrative, in order to regain his lost time, replied, "This prince died suddenly."

During a late calling out of the North Somerset yeomanry, at Bath, the servant of one of them, a "Batcome boy," was enlivened by a visit from his sweetheart. After escorting her over the city, and being fatigued with showing her what she had "ne'er zeed in all her life," he knocked loudly at the door of a house in the Crescent, against which a hatchment was placed, and on the appearance of the powdered butler, boldly ordered "two glasses of scalded wine, as hot as thee canst make it." The man, staring, informed him he could have no scalded wine there — 'twas no public-house. "Then dose thee head," replied Somerset, "what'st hang out thik there zign var?"

Did the reader ever hear the tale of "Cæsar's Stile?"—that of Agricola's long ladle he may probably have read in the "Antiquary." Dr. Stukeley, or some other antiquarian, was travelling through England, when he heard that on a certain hill there was a stile called "Cæsar's Stile." "Ay," said the doctor, "such a road mentioned in Antoninus passed near here; and the traditional name of this stile confirms the probability of a Roman camp on this spot." Whilst he was surveying the prospect, a peasant came up, whom the doctor addressed: "They call this Cæsar's Stile, my friend, do they not?" "Ees, zur," said the man, "they call it so ar'ter poor old Bob Cæsar, the carpenter (rest his soul!); I helped him to make it, when I was a boy."

"Sir," said an inn-keeper one day to a person who had frequently visited his house, but who had never been famed for his attachment to truth, "you have taken away my character." "Is it possible?" replied the other. "I have never mentioned your name, and should be glad to know in what manner I have injured you?" "Sir," rejoined Boniface, "I do not charge you with having mentioned my name; but before you came hither I was always considered as the greatest liar in this town."

Convinced that patience moderates every grief, a gentleman conceived he could not speak better comfort to a young widow, who the day before had buried her husband, than by advising her to take patience. The widow, having already within herself made choice of a second caro sposa whose name was Patience, vivaciously asked, "What! has he really mentioned it to you?"

A laundress who was employed in the family of a great man said to him with a sigh, "Only think, my lord, how small a sum of money would make me happy." "How little?" said he. "Oh, my lord, twenty pounds would make me perfectly happy." "Then I will send it to you to-morrow, upon the understanding that the amount will make your happiness perfect." "I thank you, my lord, and assure you it will," said she, and took her departure. She was no sooner outside the door than she thought she might as well have asked and received forty; so she stepped back, saying, "Please make it forty." "Ah! I am released," said his lordship; "you have proved that twenty would not make you happy; nor would you be happy if you had any other sum."

PROXIES.

"By proxy I pray, and by proxy I vote,"
A graceless peer said to a Churchman of note;
Who answer'd, "My lord, then I'll venture to say,
You'll to heaven ascend in a similar way."

A Scotch pedlar, without the remotest intention on his part of getting into a quarrel or fight with any man, had put up (with his pack) for the night at a country ale-house on the borders of Wales, where, as the fates would have it, he found in the kitchen of the inn a motley assemblage of not the most desirable companions, and among the rest a Welshman, whose aim from the very first seemed to be to get into hot water with poor Sawney. The latter, sagaciously appreciating the true character of his tormentor, and determined to get rid of him in the quietest way possible, told him that he "did not want to fight." This only excited to a still higher pitch the bravado of the Welshman, and he told the Scotchman that he would "make him fight." "Well," said Sawney, "if I must fight, let me say my prayers before I fight"—which the Welshman conceding, the Scotchman fell upon his knees and implored his Maker to pardon him for "the twa men he had already killed, and for the one that was aboot to die." The Scotchman slowly rose from his knees, but not before the Welshman had made a precipitate retreat.

FACTS ARE STUBBORN THINGS.

Books make up no small part of human happiness.—FREDERICK THE GREAT.

THE trade of the "tallow-chandler" is first mentioned in the reign of Edward I.

For every four shillings spent in England on drink only a halfpenny is expended on education.

The rise of the candle trade in England may be said to date from 1831, when the manufacture was set free from Excise supervision.

Most of the numerous temples throughout China are painted red; everything lucky and pleasant among the Chinese is of vermilion colour.

The Chinese have no word which will compare with our English "Amen;" they say instead four words meaning "The heart wishes exactly so."

The character £ for pounds sterling is merely a capital L with a mark drawn across it, and represents the corresponding Latin word Libræ — pounds.

A "palindrome" is a sentence that reads either backwards or forwards. "Madam, I'm Adam" is one, and we may suppose it to have been used by the first man in introducing himself to Eve.

Dr. Robinson, of Lewisham, has proved that babies a day old will cling to a stick, hanging the whole body thereon, for a space of time varying from ten seconds to two minutes and a half. In itself an astonishing discovery! But he also observes that they invariably try to bring the feet up to the level of the hands, so as to clutch with their toes as well.

It seems to be the natural habit of sheep to betake themselves to the highest parts of the hill to spend the night. It is generally regarded as a sign of the approach of good weather when the flock sets off early to bed. When they linger about late on low land, or do not go to the hill-tops at all at night, unfavourable weather is indicated.

The Mohaves believe that all who die and are not cremated are turned into owls, and when they hear an owl hooting at night they think it is the spirit of some dead Mohave returned. After anyone dies they do not eat salt or wash themselves for four days. They had formerly an annual burning of property, and all would contribute something to the flames in expectation of its going up to their departed friends in heaven, or "White Mountain," as they call it.

The average frequency of respiration is about eighteen per minute.

Russia still clings to the old style with accumulating error. Its calendar is now twelve days behind.

During one day the human body generates enough heat to melt 40 lb. of ice and raise it to boiling-point.

On September 2, 1752, eleven nominal days were struck out of the calendar, so that the day following was called September 14 instead of 3.

Good Friday is one of the best and most musical of the forms which the name of this day in Holy Week has assumed. In Bohemia it is called "Great Friday," in Southern Germany "Black Friday," in Denmark "Long Friday," and in Wales it is "Friday of the Lesson of the Cross." In some places also on the Continent it is called "Still Friday."

By "the ancient laws" of Wales "the candle-bearer to royalty was allowed a piece of candle as long as the breadth of his hand, and was entitled to the fragments, and enjoyed the delectable privilege of claiming all the tops on condition that he bit them off." In our own time a fortune that rose to the peerage began with the perquisite of candle-ends in a great official office.

Watts, a Bristol man, the discoverer of the present mode of making shot, owed his fortune to a dream, which led him to wonder what shape molten lead would assume in falling through the air, and, finally, to set his mind at rest, he ascended to the top of the steeple of a church, and dropped slowly and regularly a ladleful of molten lead into a moat below. Descending, he took from the bottom of the shallow pool several handfuls of the most perfect shot he had ever seen.

THE RULE OF THE ROAD.

The Rule of the Road is a paradox quite;
For in driving your carriage along,
If you turn to the left you are sure to go right,
If you turn to the right you go wrong.

CUPISS' CONSTITUTION BALLS

Are an Unfailing Remedy (see Pamphlet).

TESTIMONIALS.

THE CANNOCK AGRICULTURAL CO., LTD.

CANNOCK, Staffs., April 16th, 1890.

DEAR SIRS,—I have much pleasure in testifying to the superiority of your Horse Constitution Balls. We have used them for the last 10 years, and find nothing that can equal them. You can make what use you like of this testimonial.—Yours faithfully,

HENRY R. HART, Managing Director.

IPSWICH, June 4th, 1891.

DEAR SIRS,—I find your Cupiss' Constitution Balls the best medicine obtainable for horses when out of health or in bad condition.

I also had a cow in a very low weak state, and thought she would have to be killed, but I gave her a course of Constitution Balls (one every other day) and she got perfectly healthy and well and came back to her milk and condition.—A. PAGE, Coachman to A. F. NICHOLSON, ESQ.

For Horses, for Grease, Swelled Legs, Cracked Heels, Coughs, Colds, Staring Coat, Influenza, giving tone and vigour, and keeping high-fed Horses in Health, &c.

For Cattle and Sheep, in cases of Hove or Blown, Hide-Bound, Loss of Appetite, Distemper, Epidemic, &c.

For SCOURING in Calves they are almost infallible.

Prepared upwards of 50 years by the late FRANCIS CUPISS, M.R.C.V.S., Diss, Norfolk. Sold by Chemists and Medicine Vendors in Packets at 1s 9d and 3s 6d each, 7 small 10s 6d, 7 large 21s, or direct from PROPRIETOR, THE WILDERNESS, DISS, on receipt of amount.
